Never in the history of Washington has there been such a gigantic lesson offered to the American people as that which is given by the exhibit of the International Tuberculosis Congress, which is now open in the new National Museum.

Every bit of available space in the hall is filled, and very step of the thousands of visitors who thronged the galleries throughout the morning and afternoon was a lesson in one of the most tremendous battles the human race ever has fought, and which revealed also the unending series of victories it has won in the campaign against the white plague.

Many Notable Scientists.

When Commissioner Macfarland welcomed the delegates and visitors to the congress, he called together one of the most notable group of scientists in the world. For three weeks the public of Washington and the little army of visitors who are here for the congress will be given the benefit of years of study and research. They may see as clearly what has been done in the innermost sections of foreign countries as right here in Washington, and for a visit to the exhibition halls they may get first-hand knowledge of every known preventive and every known remedy which has been discovered to the world.

One might spend hours every day in the big building and still find endless things to study. The exhibition, which has been written of so many times since the congress was first proposed, cannot be judged fairly in any other way than by viewing it. It is stupendous in proportions, materially and from an educational standpoint.

Much of Benefit.

Anyone infected with tuberculosis may find an opportunity to benefit by the life study of men who have devoted every minute of their time and energy to fighting the disease.

One of the most notable of the foreign exhibits is that of Germany, the home of Dr. Koch, who discovered the tuberculosis germ.

The campaign in New York probably is one of the most exhaustive and practical which has been adopted. Under the auspices of the Department of Health the public has been educated to the absolute necessity for co-operation on the part of the people toward stamping out the disease.

Public Lectures Given.

During the summer public lectures, illustrated by stereoscopic views, are given in the public hall of the city. Not only are the lectures advertised in the papers and notices given to the people where it is possible, but little slips explaining all about the lectures are given to the school children.

In order to bring the matter forcibly to the attention of the foreign element, the slips also are printed in foreign languages, and are carried into the lecture hall by the children. There never is one of the lectures given before an audience of less than 2,500.

The exhibit of New York is complete in every detail. Pictures, charts and every other means of illustrating the work and its details help to make the arguments more complete.

Bay State Exhibit.

Massachusetts also stands out as one of the big battlegroups in the campaign against the disease, and, through the State and many colonies, camps, and sanitariums for the care of patients. One of the most attractive features of the Massachusetts exhibit is its miniature representations of the colonies devoted to the care of the patients.

Conspicuous among these is one showing the day camp at Mattapan, where consumptives may ride out on a trolley car, spend the entire day under the trees, receive three meals, and have the attention of nurses and physicians, returning to their homes at night.

The tremendous display of the day camp of fresh air, one of the most rigid doctrines of the cause, is shown in many of the public and State exhibits in miniature porches equipped for sleeping. Some are entirely enclosed, although with windows around the entire house to be thrown open at will.

Printers Show Progress.

A significant feature of the congress is the exhibit of the International Typographical Union, the only labor organization which has established and is maintaining its own institutions. One of its colonies is the Union Printers' Home, at Colorado Springs, where twenty-two buildings are maintained.

Prominently displayed on the main floor of the exhibition building is the exhibit of the Washington Playgrounds Association, one of the most complete which has been shown since the association was formed. The exhibit is in charge of Mrs. Elizabeth Rafter, who is just putting the finishing touches on the little group of playgrounds.

Next to the Washington playgrounds is the exhibit of the hospital at Sea Breeze, near New York, and one of the most notable institutions under the auspices of the New York association.

Dr. Buhre, of Sweden, gave an interesting lecture at 2 o'clock this afternoon, and will repeat it at 4 p. m. The moving pictures used for the illustration show, among other things, the members of the royal family visiting Dr. Buhre in his own establishment.

GIVES MORE LESSONS TO BANK EXAMINERS

Comptroller Tells Class to Learn Difference Between
Insolvency and Impairment.

ADDING MACHINES
MUST BE WATCHED

Treasury Official Says That Even Mechanical Device May Be
"Fixed" to Aid Thievery.

The national bank examiners, who were so severely scored yesterday by Comptroller of the Currency Murray, showed signs of agitation today, when they assembled at the Treasury Department for their second day's lesson on how best to detect bank irregularities. The stern but smooth features of the Comptroller were in strong contrast to the furrowed brows before him. His demand that they should do better work or resign had made an unpleasant but deep and salutary impression upon them. The Comptroller today laid particular stress upon what constitutes bank insolvency. He declared that many examiners confused impairment of capital with insolvency, and that this lack of knowledge frequently made it necessary for the office to require a full statement of the bank's condition before acting upon the suggestion of the examiner.

"A bank is not insolvent," said the Comptroller, "until its entire capital, surplus, and undivided profits are absorbed by losses, and its remaining assets are insufficient to cover its liabilities to depositors and other creditors, exclusive of capital stock."

In pointing out the pitfalls constructed for examiners, Mr. Murray cautioned them to beware of frauds when they were compelled to use any part of the clerical force of a bank to assist in an examination.

Adding Machines "Fixed."

Murray further told them that the unsuspecting adding machine should be carefully inspected, as instances have come to his attention wherein the machines had been adroitly manipulated to cover shortages.

The examiners were soon left to themselves, Comptroller Murray feeling that it was impossible for him to have paved and the specific line of inquiry marked, the examiners could work to better advantage on their own.

The examiners may be in private session a week. The Comptroller is determined to correct existing evils in the examination of banks. He does not conceal his satisfaction over the earnest manner in which the examiners have taken up the work assigned them.

Defers Invitations.

The Comptroller will defer his invitation to clearing house associations, to send representatives here, until he has the present work out of the way. He feels that with the report of the Eastern bank examiners in his possession upon the best methods of detecting irregularities in national banks, he will be better equipped to confer with the clearing house men.
